Yes indeed, Mr. William J. Jones, editor of the St. Joseph Union, has returned from a most invigorating trip among the crystal lakes and perfumed balsams of Wisconsin. Bill is some old sport at the pleasureable game and 288 (by actual count) black bass and rainbow trout, weighing from 12 to 67 pounds, fell easy prey to the gaffs and hooks (unhooked) dropped with the skill of an Isaac W. Ward among the big pines and boulders. Mr. Jones is also a humanitarian of the first water, just can't see anything softer, so of course he returned the fish to the cold bosom of the sparkling depths from which they came, at least so claims that is why he didn't bring a shore fish or a photograph of one home with him.

AGAINST A HOPELESS TASK

Hokus—Flubdub seems to have a wonderful opinion of his knowledge.

Fokus—I should say he has. Why?

I have actually heard him attempt to argue with his son, who is in his fresh man year at college.

JACK DUNCAN TELLS THIS

"Why so cold, my dear?" he barked.

"Say," called his wife, "you got to bed and quit trying to hold the hand of that marble statue."
